In higher plants and animals the phenomena of growth are accompanied by phenomena of differentiation. The two processes go along together until finally the adult condition is reached, in which the organism has attained not only a certain size, but also a complex condition of differentiation of parts or organs. In studies of variation it has been the usual - though by no means invariable - custom to take a particular character or set of characters found in the adult as something given, and then proceed, by processes now becoming well known, to investigate the nature and degree of the variation exhibited in these characters. But since the condition of the adult organism is, with respect to every character, the result of a process of gradual development and growth, it is clear that in order to gain anything approaching a satisfactory analysis from the biological standpoint, we can not take the adult structure as something given, but must investigate the laws according to which the morphogenetic processes concerned in its production operate. There is no doubt that the problem presented by the phenomena of morphogenesis is one of the most fundamental in biology. Just at present we are witnessing a period of remarkable activity in the investigation of the problems of heredity, and we are told that here lies the way to follow when in search of biological truth. No one can doubt either the immense...
